DESCRIPTION & NOTES

Mass-produced textured print from the 1970s by surrealist artist John Pitre. Subject matter is tied to the 1972 Munich Olympics massacre. This is a more somber, historically weighted piece compared to Pitre's more decorative surrealist work. Framed without glass. Pitre has a dedicated collector base. Similar prints typically sell in the $75–$150 range for framed pieces in good condition.

COMPARABLE RANGE

RECOMMENDED LISTING PRICE

$125 – $140

Start at $125 with best offer enabled to see where interest lands. On eBay, list at $140 to account for fees and the niche historical value of this specific 1972 piece. For local sale on Marketplace, a firm $100 gets it out the door without shipping hassle. Similar Pitre prints sit in the $75–$150 range. Be prepared to wait for the right collector since this is a more somber subject than his usual work.

RED FLAGS & SELLER ADVISORY

SHIPPING RISK

Large framed art is bulky and expensive to ship safely. No glass to worry about on this piece, which removes the biggest packing nightmare, but oversized framed prints still require corner protection and rigid packaging. Local pickup strongly recommended to keep margins intact.

LISTING ACCURACY

This is a mass-produced textured print from the 70s, not an original painting. Listing must be clear on this to avoid item-not-as-described claims.

SUBJECT MATTER SENSITIVITY

Content tied to the 1972 Munich Olympics massacre. See Dayna's Recommendation below for positioning guidance.

CONDITION

Frame has visible dust and debris in corners. Needs a deep cleaning before final listing photos are taken.

LISTING PLATFORM

SHIPPING & LOGISTICS

Local pickup preferred (Seattle). If shipping required, cost raised to cover safe packing on Rachel's end. Seller has 48 hours to pack & ship at time of sale. Advise pre-boxing now so it's label-ready in whoever's possession.

DAYNA'S RECOMMENDATION

MARKET READ

This is a solid niche piece with historical weight, but framed art is always a bit of a gamble due to shipping costs and slower turnover. John Pitre has a dedicated collector base, so the demand is there if you are patient. Stick to local pickups or eBay where you can pass the shipping costs to the buyer to keep your margins safe.

SUBJECT MATTER & SELLER POSITIONING

This is a heightened political moment in history for this content to be sold where opinions may not filter or land in the marketplace as art can be intended. I'd prepare for a professional, non-emotional seller to handle the sale and customer interaction on public spaces — just to be able to keep the seller's interest in the sale toward Rachel's valued and highly desirable position with this piece, whether she chooses to sell with my services, through Rachel's broad network, or any other direction.

SELLING STRATEGY

Dayna is willing to post and resell under her brand. Plan: hit Pitre's personal Facebook collector groups, use targeted ad accounts with a partnered rate through Spruce with commission split at Rachel's discretion. Local pickup in Seattle. Shipping raised to cover safe packing on Rachel's end.

If there is a market but low turnover, Rachel can ship to Los Angeles at media rate and Dayna can sell in her normal flow — or seller holds until sale, at which point Rachel or seller has 48 hours to pack and ship.

IMMEDIATE ACTION

Pack and box now so at sale time it's ready for a label in whoever's possession. No glass on this frame, so packing is straightforward — corner protectors, bubble wrap, and a flat rigid box. Get it done now so when a buyer hits, it's label-and-go.
